

Can Democracy Survive in the Middle East?

Friday, February 7, 2014

12:00p - 1:30p | MIT Bldg E40-496 | 1 Amherst St, Cambridge

About the speaker:

Colonel Miri Eisin (retired) earned a B.A. from Tel Aviv University, an M.A. in security studies from Haifa University, and is a graduate of the Israeli National Defense College. Colonel Eisin served as deputy head of the combat intelligence corps, assistant to the director of Military Intelligence, and as an intelligence officer in combat and research units. She served as the Israeli government spokesperson during the Second Lebanon War (2006), and as international press secretary to Prime Minister Ehud Olmert during the Annapolis process. She is working on her doctorate at Haifa University, writing about political narratives in post-modern conflicts.

Free and open to the public | A light lunch will be served

Cosponsored by CIS and MISTI MIT-Israel Program